Subject: Message from the provost, vice provost and dean of students

Dear Students:

As a community, we are all dedicated to making Johns Hopkins a better, stronger and safer place. Right now, we are at a point where making the kind of progress we all seek requires taking a breath and putting things in perspective. The alleged sexual assault of a visitor at a fraternity party two weekends ago demonstrated starkly that our community needs to spend some time thinking about how we can accelerate our ongoing efforts to address issues of sexual violence and alcohol abuse at Johns Hopkins.

As you know, the university has directed member organizations of the Interfraternity Council not to hold social events pending completion of an interim plan to make parties safer for our students and our guests. Today, we want to share with you directly why this action was taken.

We want to be clear that the university deeply appreciates the IFC's work last week to adopt interim measures for controlling social activities sponsored by member chapters. The IFC voted unanimously to require that there be no open fraternity parties for the rest of the semester and to mandate the use of party monitors. This was a commendable step, and we in the administration thank the IFC and its leaders for taking it.

We were encouraged by the IFC's speedy deliberation and adoption of these good-faith procedures. We also recognized, however, that in order for these measures to be effective and consistent, we need to work together on an implementation plan. There needs to be agreement, for instance, on the standards for party monitors to enforce and on training for the monitors themselves.

The university thus informed the IFC last Thursday night that we would immediately convene an implementation team to address outstanding issues and put the proposed measures in place. We believe an implementation plan can be prepared expeditiously, and we are committed to resuming social activities as soon as possible.

We also will press ahead with the work of various university and student groups that have been meeting on issues of alcohol abuse, sexual violence and campus life. One of those groups, the Alcohol Strategy Group and its Student Subcommittee, has been on track to provide early next year recommendations on ways to reduce harmful drinking. An area of focus is new and improved party procedures for all student groups. The IFC initiatives and implementation plan that we are developing now for the balance of this semester should be seen as interim measures, which we will learn from and reflect upon moving forward.

We recognize that the decision to postpone social events pending an implementation plan has disappointed members of the student body and reduced opportunities to relax and socialize together this past weekend. But we also know that there is broad consensus in our community that we have serious issues that must be addressed, and in the Johns Hopkins way: openly; fearlessly; with respect for evidence-based best practices; and, above all, with the welfare of our students, guests and entire community as our first concern.

We are proud to be a part of the Johns Hopkins community, and we know that you all share in that pride. Reflective of that, we hope that you will continue to join with us in making Johns Hopkins the best university it can be.

Sincerely,

Robert C. Lieberman
Provost and Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs

Kevin G. Shollenberger
Vice Provost for Student Affairs

Terry Martinez
Assistant Vice Provost/Dean of Students
